When years have wrought their changes
Upon the human heart,
When life's bright hopes have vanished,
And earthly friends depart,
When thou art sad and lonely,
Think that I for me will say,
"I truly am thy friend".

To Ella,

They say that years as they come and go,
Do touch the form and dim the eye,
And cover the raven brow with snow,
Causing the youth-born hopes to die.
But though winters be many and dark and cold
A faithful heart will never grow old.

To Edw,

Why one he need write a letter that never sends,
Peace, long life, and a host friends;
Why seconds angels their wings dip,
And record you sage counsel o'er each passing trip;
Be ever sate near your heart keeping be,
And when far distant our thoughts turn to me;
This world, and 'tis true I've read it,
True friendship is a jewel rare, we seldom meet.
